Jamison Brass Returns to Market

Rapid City, South Dakota.....Brass Cartridge Case Manufacturer, Jamison International has been reconstituted as a Division of Captech International. This high quality manufacturer of unique, obsolete and hard to find brass cartridge cases, as well as military, hunting and African game calibers have moved operations from Sturgis to new facilities totaling 31,000 square feet in Rapid City, South Dakota. Marc Jamison oversees operational control assuring the stringent quality standards of the past will remain intact moving forward.

The new facility also offers ample room for an ongoing program of expansion and machine refurbishment to reduce the cycles between production runs of many hard to find cartridge cases.

The company is now accepting orders on all of the previously produced calibers as well as their basic brass line for forming. This is an exciting time for handloaders who have been without access to many the cartridge cases which have been difficult to impossible to find during this time of transition. “Many unique cases are currently available in stock and more are in production each week”, said a company spokesperson.
